

Community Outreach Specialist

Native American survivors of domestic violence do not seek access to family court to protect their safety and the safety of their children, or to seek relief regarding their custody and parenting time issues. The Community Outreach Specialist will work closely with the Native Liaison position to provide community outreach to the Native American community. This is a District Court grant position and will work approximately 5-8 hours per week.

Job Functions (Duties/Responsibilities):

The Community Outreach Specialist will assist the Native Liaison in the following ways:

- Working to build relationships within the Native community, specifically at the University and College age level.
- Developing education presentations and resources including a resource manual for Native specific resources
- Scheduling, planning, and assisting to host cultural education to service providers, and advocates to promote understanding about working Native community
- Scheduling, planning, and assisting to host community education presentations on topics including:
 - overall court process (where to go for what)
 - what relief Family Court can and can't grant
 - rights of the parties
 - ENE/ADR processes
 - custody, child support, and co-parenting basics
 - the effect of domestic violence on children
 - education/support groups for batterers
- Providing information (not legal advice) such as definition of legal terms and explanation of processes
- Researching and making recommendations for additional effective education and outreach
